SUPERVISION: A RELATIONAL CHANGE PROCESS

POST-GRADUATE CERTIFICATE/DIPLOMA

MARIE-ANNE CHIDIAC, SALLY DENHAM-VAUGHAN & LYNDA OSBORNE

Beginning January 2020

Supervision is a requirement for counsellors, psychotherapists as well as coaches and many others in the helping professions.

In psychological work we consider change to be best supported by relationships in which difficulties can be explored, challenges made and good practice confirmed.

Whether working clinically or in a coaching setting with clients, it is not unusual for practitioners to experience relational and practice difficulties. This translates into the need for a supervisor who can offer new models and a fresh perspective or insight as well as supporting competent practice.

Our Approach

Our approach to supervision practice is deeply relational. This means recognising that relatedness to others is an existential given and a core organising principle that shapes who we are and what we do. In a relational paradigm our sense of self emerges through being in relationship with others - both at the level of our relationships with other individuals, and also in the wider context.

On this course we will consider how the self of the client, the therapist/coach and the supervisor, the relationship between them, their specific contexts, and the wider field in which they all engage are continuously influencing the supervisory process. We will explore these dynamics drawing on our published process model of supervision, supported by a range of theoretical models and experiential learning.

Who is it for?

The course is for practitioners with at least 2 years' experience. It is suitable for practitioners in different areas of psychological, coaching and organisational work, including:

- qualified counsellors, psychotherapists.
- counselling, clinical and coaching psychologists.
- coaches and mediators
- others in the helping professions both statutory and voluntary.

The programme will be taught by experienced practitioners who have a combination of supervision, psychotherapy, training, coaching and organisation development experience.

FULL COURSE OUTLINE:

Module One: 30 - 31 Jan , 1 Feb 2020

Meeting and contracting: beginning work in supervision

In this initial module we will focus on cultivating conditions to foster nourishing relationships, both on the course and in our supervision practice. A specific focus will be contracting, task boundaries and context with an introduction to our process model.

Module Two: 17-18 April 2020

Relational supervision in practice

We will deepen the exploration of the process model with attention to the three foci of self, other and situation, and explore how topics including co-transference, parallel process and changing cultural context affect supervision.

Module Three: 12-13 June 2020

Practice Issues, the roles of the Supervisor

This module will review the tasks and responsibilities of supervision including legal, ethical and professional practice issues. Working with Supervision Groups is considered. Particular attention will be placed on exploring aspects of shame and power dynamics.

Module Four: 17-18-19 September, 2020

Attending to body process and experimentation

This module emphasises awareness of embodied process and how our bodies engage in relational dialogues, with clients and in supervision. Experimentation and creativity is a focus and development of individual style. Consideration will also be given to alternatives to face to face supervision.

Diploma in Relational Supervision: 6-7 November 2020

(Additional £500 – excluding supervision of supervision).

To gain the Diploma participants need to have:

- Attended all 4 modules.
- Two further days of consolidation.
- 40 hours practice of supervision.
- 10 hours supervision of supervision (arranged, and financed independently).
- 20 minute excerpt of a supervision session with a 2000 word process report.
